

ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for recording, measuring and calculating the percentage of positive audience response generated by any entertainment or presentation source involving an audience. The methods and apparatus described are intended as an evaluation tool to establish quantitative performance benchmarks and to objectively determine audience satisfaction based on readily identifiable and measurable positive audience response. A method is also provided to more objectively quantify the therapeutic effects of laughter.